
A Zazaki Alevi Treatise from Diyarbekir*

MUSTAFA DEHQAN

Abstract

The overwhelming importance of Kurdish, both language and literature, in Turkish Kurdistan has tended to push into the background all other languages, though some of them are spoken by large and important populations. Zazaki and its literature is one of these that has received far less attention than it deserves, many educated people outside of Turkish Kurdistan being hardly aware of its existence. In this article I have presented the content of fragments from a new Zazaki source. Fragments fortunately preserved in the binding cover of an old book, which seems to give us at least one of the neglected sources from which the Zazaki writers drew, and to carry us back into the memories and the doctrines of the Zazaki community. It has great value as a document of the history of Alevism in Eastern Anatolia.

That Alevism must have been an important factor in Kurdistan's history in the Zazaki-speaking area is reflected in the fact that the literary heritage of the Zaza community has preserved valuable, and sometimes unique, evidence of its most formidable opponent's history and doctrine. The nature and weight of Zazaki and related sources deserve a special investigation that refers to the local history of the Alevi sect and which may shed some light on the much-disputed character of that religion and its followers. This article, however, does not pretend to give another account of Zazaki language and literature¹, nor does it intend to deal with the problem of Alevi doctrines and their history.² Rather, its main aim is to present a newly-found Zazaki manuscript in which the Alevis and their religion are briefly described. Of course the difficulties of such a manuscript and its contents should not be underestimated; I have been confronted with so many questions and problems that it would probably have been more appropriate to insert a question-mark after the title of this article. Let me, therefore, only describe the manuscript and some of those theological problems in order to give an impression of the specific subjects involved in the study of the present Zazaki text that originated in the Zazaki-speaking area of Eastern Anatolia.

*This research was sponsored by Iran National Science Foundation.

¹On the Zazaki language, see, for example, L. Paul, Zazaki: Grammatik und Versuch einer Dialektologie (Wiesbaden, 1998).

²For Alevi doctrines, in general, see P.J. Bumke, "Kizilbasch-Kurden in Dersim (Tunceli, Türkei): Marginalität und Haresie", Anthropos 74 (1979), pp. 530–548; and M. van Bruinessen, "'Aslini Inkar Eden Haramzadedir!' The Debate on the Ethnic Identity of the Kurdish Alevis", in: K. Kehl-Bodrogi, B. Kellner-Heinkele, and A. Otter-Beaujean (eds.), Collected Papers of the International Symposium "Alevism in Turkey and Comparable Sycretistic Religious Communities in the Near East in the Past and Present" Berlin, 14–17 April 1995 (Leiden, 1997), pp. 1–23.

Manuscript

27

28 The Alevi treatise described in this article is one of the many unstudied texts in the tradition 29 of Zazaki religious literature. It is described by the author as his 30 Book on ‘Alī, the important incarnation of God, and the doctrines of writer’s ancestors, the 31 great *Qizilbāshs*³ (i.e. Alevis).

32 The present work is, to my knowledge, known in only one Zazaki manuscript that I located 33 in the possession of Mehmet Yildiz, a Kurdish uneducated bookbinder, in Diyarbekir. The 34 provenance of the manuscript is not entirely clear. Mehmet claimed that the manuscript was 35 previously in the possession of a Dersimi Zaza who migrated to Diyarbekir, and when he 36 died it was sold to Faruk Efendi, a Turkish dealer whose shop in Istanbul was for years the 37 meeting place for collectors. Faruk expected to sell it to Istanbul University, but his death 38 in Diyarbekir brought that project to an end. Finally the manuscript was purchased by the 39 cousin of Faruk from whom Mehmet has bought the manuscript.

40 The manuscript is written in the Arabic script in the Zazaki language by a non-professional 41 scribe, and begins with the basmala. It is written in a type of naskh, and does not have a title 42 page with the name of the work. On the last folio of the first section of the manuscript, 43 the scribe gives the date 1212 AH (1798), and on the last folio another piece of handwriting 44 gives the date 1246 AH (1831). There are some other, later, dates in the text. According to its 45 palaeographic features, the scribe and the text both suggest the same dates for the production 46 of the manuscript: end of eighteenth-beginning of nineteenth century. The treatise consists 47 of 32 folios. The size of the folio is 22 × 18.5 cm; the text takes up both sides of the 48 folio, with 14 lines on each side; the size of the text is 16 × 12 cm. The pagination is 49 late and Oriental. The paper is of European manufacture (London) with a watermark. The 50 watermark reads “W. Lemoine”. The date of manufacture of the paper is 1784 (watermark).
51 All of the manuscript is written with black ink; there is no any shanjarf word. The binding 52 is somewhat late of brown leather. The author was Isa Beg b. ‘Alī, who held the title Sultan 53 Efendi and was also known as Sultan. Although born in Diyarbekir, he had lived in Istanbul 54 from his early years. We know nothing more about him except that he was the author of an 55 Islamic History (Tā’rīkh), which comprised at least three volumes.⁴

56 From the characteristics of the manuscript it is important to note several graphic features.
57 Judging from the handwriting and the dates, the copy of this work was made by several 58 scribes. The principles of writing several words are different not only for different scribes, 59 but sometimes are not even the same for the same scribe. The letter wāw, for example, is 60 frequently written as lām, for example in the word vate, and hā is written instead of the letter 61 jīm, for example in the word ciab. There are many crossed-out words, and letters written 62 above the lines, which were omitted or did not fit in the line. There are also many Turkisms 63 in the text; that is, Turkish words, sentences, phrases, and lines of verse.

³The opening words of the treatise. It is a pleasure to thank Şahin Xêrô for checking my translation here and elsewhere and to thank Turan Kaya for making the manuscript available to me.

⁴To my knowledge, Efendi’s History is lost and only cited in the present manuscript. See fol.9v.

64 As for the place of origin, the main scribe was evidently of Zazaki background and training, 65 even if living in non-Zazaki regions.⁵ There are some mistakes in the Turkish, and sometimes 66 the Zazaki, sentences of the manuscript and the scribe seems not to have been perfectly ed-67 ucated in Turkish. Possibly the scribe did not care about his Turkish reputation, which could 68 indicate that his priority in producing this manuscript was more commercial than aesthetic, 69 and he wanted to carry out his work as quickly as possible. The fact that manuscript was 70 written by someone who was self-confessedly not a professional scribe raises the possibility 71 that the Zazaki text of the manuscript may also have been poorly copied. Such an expectation 72 proves fully justified, and a number of corrections need to be made in the Zazaki text.

73 Arguments

74 Sultan Efendi's treatise on the Alevism is in two parts (maqāla); the first on the Alevi 75 community and the second on the Alevi doctrines. For convenience these will be designated 76 I and II respectively, the Arabic numeral following being the number of the chapter (bāb).
 77 At the beginning of the treatise, the two chapters of the first maqāla are announced (jev 78 and düdiy [sic]), but the text itself is not divided accordingly into numbered chapters. At the 79 head of the second maqāla, two chapters are announced and the text is so divided. But in no 80 extant folio does the numbering of the chapters run smoothly – some folios have an extra 81 title “al-faşl” and two folios are out of phase. It is reasonable, therefore, to suppose that the 82 chapter numbers, folio numbers, and some headings were added after the text was written.

83 The first maqāla includes subjects that were written over a period of some two months, 84 and which reflect the principal Alevi areas of Eastern Anatolia in which the author has taken 85 an interest. The first folios deal with the Shiite terms, ghālī and ghulāt, which, generally 86 speaking, were not given a satisfactory explanation in the Islamic period; in this discussion, 87 the author attempts to prove that the terms originally bore the meaning of “Alevi”, as a 88 true follower of ‘Alī [sic]. Some folios deal with the historical background of the Alevis.
 89 The author discloses information with regard to the Alevi position in the Ottoman Empire, 90 both at the time of Sultan Selīm III (1789–1807)⁶ and after that. He also presents the origins
 91 of the Alevi tribes, Ottoman legal traditions concerning Alevi tributes to the Ottomans, 92 and their economic situation. The following folios are devoted to the Alevi community in 93 Dersim. After a precise analysis of the Alevi tribes and families settled in that region, the 94 author arrives at the conclusion that the Alevi community comprised a considerably larger 95 population than is generally ascribed to it the Ottoman official records. Some members of 96 the Alevi congregation were merchants, since Dersim was a main station on the business 97 road to Europe. They were, therefore, men of wealth who commanded a certain position in 98 society. But a considerable number of Alevis must have belonged to the rank and file of the 99 Dersimi population. The final folios of the first part of the manuscript deal with the history 100 of Alevis during the years in which the author lived and worked. The most important section of the final folios of the first section is a discussion of the statistical information regarding the social situation of the Alevi gathered by Sultan Efendi: Alevi sanctuaries, Alevi warriors in the Ottoman army, Alevi traders, and Alevi villages and their population.

⁵According to the writings of the second section, he was eleven years in Aleppo. See fol. 25v. According to these brief allusions, as we shall say, it might be accepted that he was under the influence of Shiite communities in Aleppo. For Shiite groups in Aleppo and northern Syria, see Muhammad Ghalib al-Tawil, Ta'rikh al-'Alawiyīn, 2nd ed. (Beirut, 1966), and M. Mossa, Extremist Shiites: The Ghulat Sects (Syracuse, 1987).

⁶For general information regarding the period of Selīm III, see G. Gawrych, “Şeyh Galib and Selim III: Mevlevism and the Nizam-ı Cedid”, International Journal of Turkish Studies 4 (1987), pp. 91–114.

The focus of the second chapter of the first maqāla is on ‘Alī and his role within Alevism. At the outset it is necessary to recall that Efendi’s work is essentially a history of the Alevi community within the bounds of the Ottoman Empire. Since, for Efendi, the Muslim Ottoman Empire served as a place from which a “deadly message” came (he was referring to the Ḥanafī teaching of the Ottoman mufītīs), the role of ‘Alī was certainly not already well established there. The all-pervasive influence of Efendi has meant that the existence of a second religious tradition, represented by ‘Alī, has consistently been neglected or marginalised by Ottoman mufītīs, both medieval and modern. First of all, he gives a general account of ‘Alī’s life including many legendary tales. Efendi names as his source for all this a Turkish document kept in the religious archives of the Alevi. From this account he then provides a Turkish verse translation of a legend in which ‘Alī is the unique God. There are also verse texts which provide descriptions of ‘Alī’s life, wars, pious acts, travels, etc. The origins of these stanzaic poems with formalised dialogues go back to the precedence contests of Alevi literature in Turkish.

It is interesting that the author also has translated some parts of the ‘Alī’s Nahj al-Bilāgha into Zazaki. On the evidence of the manuscript, Sultan Efendi translated no less than nine sentences of ‘Alī’s advice from Arabic into Zazaki, and seven into Turkish.

The first and the second sections of the second maqāla are both dedicated to the Alevi doctrine in general. However, special emphasis is placed on the *çirax-sônduran*⁷, pîrs, dedes, and *seyîds*⁸, uxwet (“holy brotherhood”)⁹, ‘Alī bayrami (the feast of ‘Alī) and Xizir bayrami (the feast of Kihîr)¹⁰, and on Usman Farali, an Alevi priest, and his prominent role in the development and structure of Alevi asceticism and forms of Alevi sainthood. There are passages in the first and the second part of the second maqāla that seem to indicate that the author lent towards pursuing a sectarian religious purpose. This is best illustrated by the almost programmatic fol. 28.v.:

Relations between Qizilbâšhs, *Yezidis*¹¹, Shamsis [the followers of sun]¹², pagans, and Christians have been studied by the Ottoman mufītīs. Since they have so much in common in a shared culture, there rose the particular need for Qizilbâšh leaders and priests to draw strict demarcation lines to serve the self-definition of the various groups. The understanding of this process will ⁷On the çirax-sônduran, see V. Fontanier, Voyages en Orient (Paris, 1829), p. 168.

⁸On the pîrs, dedes, and seyîds, see S. Haykuni, “Dersim”, Ararat 2-3 (1896), pp. 84-87, 132-134, especially p. 86.

⁹On the holy brotherhood, see G. S. Asatrian and N. Kh. Gevorgian, “Zaza Miscellany, Notes on Some Religious Customs and Institutions”, in: A Green Leaf, Papers in Honour of Prof. Jes P. Asmussen, Acta Iranica 28 (Leiden, 1988), p. 507.

¹⁰On the feast of ‘Alī and the feast of Kihîr, see K. E. Müller, Kulturhistorische Studien zur Genese pseudoislamischer Sektengruppen in Vorderasien, Studien zur Kulturkunde 22 (Wiesbaden, 1967), pp. 29-30, and Asatrian and Gevorgian, op. cit., p. 503, n. 25.

¹¹On the Yezidis, in general, see P. G. Kreyenbroek, Yezidism, Its Background, Observances and Textual Tradition (Lewiston, 1995).

¹²There is no detailed reference to the Shamsis. For very brief information, see M. van Bruinessen and H. Boeschoten, Evlîya Çelebi in Diyarbekir, the Relevant Section of the Seyahatname (Leiden, 1988), p. 31 and the literature there.

133 certainly disturb the incorrect view of Qizilbāsh doctrine as a form of heretical Islam, the origins 134 of which go directly back to Arabia and its Arab community.

135 The author, thus, defends the credibility of the Alevi religion by comparing it with the other 136 contemporary religions, especially those religions to be found in Kurdistan, and highlighting 137 what he considers to be the superior qualities of Alevism. In this manner, it seems that he 138 hopes to demonstrate that the Alevi religion alone has an unimpeachable, notably heterodox, 139 claim on 'Alī and human religious allegiance. The working out of this apologetic argument 140 is built on the philosophical premise that human reason can discover the existence of the 141 creator God¹³, and then concludes that mankind was the highest expression of created values.
 142 The perfection present in human beings has in some way to be reflective of the qualities of 143 the God who created them. Accordingly, one should be able to discern the true religion, 144 and the true messenger of God, by determining which one of the many claimants to this 145 role credibly described God and his requirements for his creatures.

146 This process of discernment has two complementary phases. On the positive side, it is 147 necessary to test the doctrines of the several religions against what we may know of our own 148 perfections by the rigorous use of our minds. On the negative side, one should determine that 149 there are no unworthy, imperfect traits in any specific faith-system that may be alleged as fac-150 tors to motivate a person to profess that particular religion independently of divine endorse-151 ment. Needless to say, the Alevi intellectual with whom we are concerned here, attempts 152 to demonstrate that Alevism alone of the contemporary religions – i.e. Sunni Ḥanafism, 153 Christianity, Yezidism, and Shamsism – is worthy of credence from these perspectives.

154 In their own times, both this author and other thinkers who annexed their religious 155 poems to the treatise defended the Alevi faith against non-Alevis who had earlier written 156 attacks against the Alevis (Qizilbāshs or Ghālīs).¹⁴ Relying on the achievements of earlier 157 generations, the author here constructs his own treatise in terms of the theodicy that had 158 already been elaborated. But he also adapts the arguments to suit the requirements of his own 159 controversy with the non-Alevis. In the process, for example, differences between non-Alevi 160 and Alevi approaches to religious questions become apparent. Nowhere is this more evident 161 than in the discussion about how one may discern the true religion.

162 According to the controversial passages of this author, Muslims and Yezidis were very 163 influential groups in “Qizilbāsh regions”. Alevis, who (unlike Yezidis and some other Gnostic 164 groups) wanted to keep 'Alī and the Alevi doctrines as part of their own religion, were obliged 165 to reinterpret the role of 'Alī and the other Alevi doctrines in such a way that Ottoman muffīs
 166 and Alevi priests formed a real unity. In other words, the author claims that Alevi religious 167 leaders had to come to terms with the official Islamic tradition and heritage through fitting 168 Alevism into an Islamic context. This idea is expressed in more detail in fol. 26 r., where he 169 issues the following warning in his farewell discourse to his flock:

170 If Qizilbāsh's religion preserved a great many Islamic traditions in its literature, this is not a proof
 171 of a substantial Islamic part in the formation of the Qizilbāsh doctrine, but only of a Qizilbāsh 172 urge to adapt and assimilate Islamic traditions to its own ideological concepts. Beware, therefore, ¹³See especially fol.29v.

¹⁴Compare Ḥ. Ḥujjatī, “Raddīya wa Raddīya Niwīsī”, in Encyclopaedia of Shi'a VIII (Tehran, 2001), pp. 204–207.

173 of the Ottomans and Yezidis and do not be friends of them, lest thou be responsible with those 174 whose hands are full of the blood of the 'Alī.

175 The treatise contains also a considerable amount of other polemical material. For instance, 176 the author attacks a number of Yezidi interpretations by demonstrating Yezidi corruption 177 of the Islamic texts or the Satanism.¹⁵ He inveighs frequently against the allegorical mode 178 of Muslim interpreters. Certain basic questions in the Sunni-Shiite controversy, chief among 179 which is the identity of the "imāmat", are frequently raised.¹⁶

180 There are some phrases where it seems that the author has been strongly influenced by 181 Islamic philosophy. He frequently alludes to philosophical matters as an aid to exegesis on 182 the one hand and in an attempt to popularise such studies on the other. He was no original 183 philosopher, however, and his phrases are adaptations of those of his predecessors.

184 In summary, it can be stated that the essential and central aim of the author (described 185 allusively and tendentiously in II. 21r.-32r.) as an Alevi intellectual is to provide "an answer 186 to the critics". Hence, he advises his readers to study Alevi original doctrines and to conceal 187 their "true religion" from the Sunni Muslims. He argues that 'Alī always cast down the 188 arrogant and impious; that 'Alī had ordained the defeat of Ottomans, and had revealed his 189 intention to do so in the Alevi prayers that predicted the outcome of the impending war; 190 and that the Alevi community would exist until the end of time. Again he gives a polemical 191 twist to his words by adding that 'Alī, "the most complete sign of God", would put the 192 apostates to shame:

193 And he [i.e. 'Alī] will restore to the sanctuaries the treasures which Ottoman mufīṭ, the wicked, 194 had taken from them. He will purify the kingdom of the Ottomans from the stink of the sacrifices 195 of Ḥanafism, and he will overthrow their tables and will destroy their mosques, he will banish 196 their erroneous doctrines, will destroy their houses of assembly, and will remove their treasures 197 to the treasures of the Qizilbāsh community¹⁷.

198 In the present Zazaki treatise, along with the Zazki and Turkish poems that it inspired, the 199 apocalyptic sections are an important feature and they occupy a prominent space in the 200 text. The prominence of the apocalyptic genre, however, is not surprising given the fact 201 that within Shiite heterodox communities apocalypse was an important literary reaction to 202 the challenge of Sunni Islam.¹⁸ In these sections the accent is on the ex eventu prophecy
203 of the conditions of life for Alevi under the Ottoman Empire until the projected coming 204 of the Mahdī, who is said to be the "manifestation of 'Alī". The author's discussion of the 205 doctrine of the Incarnation ("naskh") is a brief single section in the treatise. He does not 206 attempt to prove the doctrine here. Rather, he assumes that it is the evident teaching of the 207 Alevi scripture that in 'Alī God has manifested himself to His creatures in a human form.
208 Sultan Efendi devotes some sentences to ridiculing those who believe less noble things about 209 'Alī as a God, but who, at the same time, declare that there is no any difference between ¹⁵On the role of Satan in Yezidi religion, see M. Dehqan, "Qit'īi Gūrānī darbāra-yi Shayṭān", Nāme-ye Irān-e Bāstān 8 (2004), pp. 47–64, especially p. 50ff.

¹⁶See, for example, fol.22r. and fol.26r.

¹⁷Fol.25r.

¹⁸See al-Irbilī, Kashf al-Ghumma (Qumm, 1961), iii, pp. 227–343; and Najm al-Dīn Ja'far b. Muḥammad al-'Askarī, al-Mahdī al-Maw'ūd al-Muntaẓar 'inda 'Ulamā' Ahl al-Sunna wa al-Imāmīyya (Beirut, 1977).

210 'Alī and God. He also explains away differences among Alevis themselves over the various 211 manifestations of the divine Incarnation or “those who differ with us”.¹⁹

212 Finally, the author protests that, since the times are evil, Alevis have to speak in symbols.
213 Alevis is different from “Ottoman religion”, and Alevis must be able to adopt different 214 policies with different groups, even though these may well cause them many severe problems.
215 It is clear that the structure of the author’s symbolism owes much to the usages that were 216 cultivated in the Shiite school system. One can trace the development of this symbolism to the 217 taqiyya, ‘action of covering’, that denotes dispensing with the ordinances of religion in cases of 218 constraint and when there is a possibility of harm, in which the doctrines regarding ‘Alī would 219 have been transmitted to the next generations.²⁰ According to the author, belief is expressed 220 by the “symbol of heart” and the “symbol of tongue”. Observing the first symbol is always 221 necessary. But if someone is certain that an injury will befall him, his property or one of his 222 co-religionists, then he is released from the obligation to fight for the faith with the tongue.

223 Authorship

224 It is well-known that there is a large amount of forgery in the religious writings of Kurdistan, 225 and that even authentic works by Kurdish sheikhs have attracted interpolations and additions
226 by other hands. Although the treatise presently under scrutiny is a very important text, it 227 should still be classified as a specimen of this kind of literature rather than as an authentic 228 Alevi work.²¹ The key to its oddity, in any case, seems to lie in the fact that it was both an 229 Alevi and a non-Alevi answer to the Ottomans. Since there is a clear distinction between 230 two sections of the treatise, we only may be able to categorise the first section as an Alevi 231 authentic work. But did Sultan Efendi write the whole of the text, both the Alevi and non 232 Alevi sections?

233 There are two accounts of how Efendi came to write it. The first unambiguously envisages 234 his contribution as consisting of the first maqāla alone, while the second apparently regards
235 it as consisting both the first and the second maqālas. In fact, it is clear from the contents 236 of the two parts that they cannot have originated together, and, while both are ascribed to 237 Sultan Efendi as separate works, the attribution to him of the second part must be rejected.

238 From the manuscript itself, it is plain that the first section was written by a professional 239 Alevi intellectual with a considerable gift for presenting his subject to laymen, and there 240 is no reason to believe that the intellectual in question was not Sultan Efendi. His style is 241 certainly an Alevi style including Alevi terms and items. Much of the work is based on other 242 Alevi writings; the first maqāla could in fact be characterised as a selection of passages from 243 Zazaki oral literature. And what it has to say about Alevi scripture and society is almost 244 always precisely what one would expect to find. The ideal to which Alevis should seek to 245 conform is entirely Alevi in conception and illustrated with reference to Alevi figures and 246 subjects alone, no non-Alevi discussions being invoked in this part. The first maqāla, in the ¹⁹Fol.30v.

²⁰On the taqiyya, see I. Goldziher, “Das Prinzip der taqiyya im Islam”, ZDMG 60 (1906), pp. 213–226.

²¹For some Alevi authentic works, see, for example, C. Öztelli, Bektaşî Gülleri (Istanbul, 1985); M. Düzgün, M. Comerd, and H. Tornécengi, Dêrsim de Diwayî, Qesê Pi-kalîkan, Erf u Mecazi, Çibenoki, Xeletmayênî [Dêrsim'de Dualar, Atasözleri, Mecazlar, Bilmeceler, Şaşırtmacalar] (Ankara, 1992).

247 other words, is a treatise written in the Alevi style and spirit on the basis of Alevi works by 248 someone who can be identified as the author of this work.

249 In contrast to the conciseness of the first maqāla, the discussion of the second maqāla is 250 diffuse and aphoristic. Here much use is made of Shiite theology and so it is not exactly 251 Alevi. In fact, it seems to be a work written for a different set of readers in a somewhat 252 different style and spirit. On turning to second maqāla, one is struck by the fact that author 253 and addressee alike are suddenly referred to in a manner different to that of first maqāla.
 254 There is no mention of Sultan Efendi. One would have expected at least some expression 255 of good wishes for his success at the end of the treatise, on a par with those that come at the 256 end of first maqāla; but the second simply peters out with a defective poem. It is, thus, clear 257 that the first and the second maqālas cannot have been conceived as parts of the same work.
 258 In principle, of course, both could still be authentic works by Sultan Efendi or another Alevi 259 intellectual, but this possibility can be ruled out on other grounds.

260 The stylistic contrast between the two maqālas of the treatise is glaring. Where the 261 first is a very simple text including legends, anecdotes, aphorisms and poetry loosely strung 262 together in no particular order, the second is a well-organised text including many theological 263 problems and some sophisticated discussions. For another thing, the discussions and poems of 264 the second maqāla are almost always not the Alevi fundamental points, such as the apocalyptic
 265 notes regarding the Mahdī who is absent in the Alevi doctrines, and they display no interest 266 in the Alevi community. In fact, the author of the second part voices a wide variety of 267 opinions that are completely at odds with those of Sultan Efendi. He does, it is true, share 268 some views with him, such as in relation to Incarnation, but it is expressive of an altogether 269 different ethos. It fails to reflect the preoccupations of Alevi because its author, it would 270 seem, has preoccupations of his own, and these preoccupations are sometimes as thoroughly 271 non-Alevi as those of Efendi are Alevi.

272 What then can we say about the author? He was certainly a Shiite, more precisely a Shiite 273 who was under influence of imāmī and Ghālī sects. The first part of the work has come to 274 be attributed to Sultan Efendi, as an Alevi intellectual, but there is nothing to give clues to 275 the authorship of the second part.

276

Conclusion

277 Our Zazaki Alevi treatise, in any case, turns out to be a source for Alevi sociological and 278 theological history, and one may conclude by asking whether this discovery warrants any 279 reconsideration of previous, often harsh, judgments on the subject. As has been seen, much 280 depends on whether or not one accepts the writer's claims and, especially, the date of the 281 treatise, which is the earliest Zazaki text that we have. If one accepts this – and to me there 282 seems to be no valid reason why one should reject it – then the treatise represents a source of 283 great importance for early events of Alevi religion and community. But, even if the writer's 284 arguments are not accepted at face value, the treatise is no late compilation, for it is found 285 in a manuscript that has been dated to the eighteenth–nineteenth century, and so it should 286 be placed at least on a par with the panegyric we have for other Zazaki texts.

287 Needless to say, by no means all the issues raised by this new text have been discussed 288 here, but it is hoped that enough has been said to demonstrate its considerable interest and 289 (I believe) importance. This would seem to be the best that one can do in the way of guess-

 290 work. Going beyond guesswork would be preferable, of course, but it is only in connection 291 with the author's life that the sources afford us a glimpse of a real personality at work, and 292 they only show us enough to make us realise how little information was transmitted.

293 Appendix: A Selection of Zazaki Words

294 The following section contains examples of Zazaki words where the written style and the 295 language of the present text are used in somewhat different ways. There are glossary entries 296 for each of the Zazaki words listed in Latin alphabet, though not in accordance with the 297 order in which they occur in Arabic script of the manuscript. Because the list is concerned 298 with actual written usage, the words are given in both Latin transliteration and Arabic 299 script. The list only includes those Zazaki words that the author used in a different sense or 300 pronunciation in the manuscript.

301 In order to achieve a uniform style and standard the Bedir Khan system is used to 302 transliterate the Zazaki words included in this glossary.²²

303 aka/ak اكا/اک 1. egg, the hard-shelled reproductive body produced by a bird and not 304 exclusively by the common domestic chicken, 2. person, sort

305 aqül اقول wise

306 asîn اسين iron

307 askar اسكار 1. soldier, 2. troop

308 beqî/beqîçe بقى/بقيچه garden

309 birader/bira برادر/برا brother

310 bôl/bûl بول/بيول very, very much

311 böq- بوق 1. to sleep, 2. to neglect

312 camî'/came جامع/جامه mosque

313 cüab/cüap جواب/جواب answer, reply

314 çarûş چاروش bazaar

315 çene چنه why?

316 çiçi چچی what, used as an interrogative expressing inquiry about the identity, nature, or 317 value of an object or matter

318 çiyendo چی یندو/چیندو somewhat

319 darûk/dar دارووک/دار tree

320 diz/doz در/دوز thief

321 dîk/dîyek دیک/دییک cock

322 dôst دوست/دست friend, one that is of the same nation, group, or community

323 düjmin دوژمن enemy, one seeking to injure, overthrow, or confound an opponent

324 ecemî اجمی Persian

325 ewrû اوروو/اورو 1. now, 2. today

326 ezin ازن like, one that is similar

327 fa'ide فائده importance

²²On the Bedir Khan system, which is widely used in the Kurdish-language scholarly literature, see J. Bedir Khan et R. Lescot, Grammaire kurde (dialecte kurmandji) (Paris, 1970), pp. 3–7.

- 328 feqir فقير/فقير little, small in importance or interest
- 329 gûl گول 1. flower, 2. religious speech of 'Alî
- 330 haz هاز love, strong affection for another arising out of kinship or personal ties
- 331 hekîm حکيم philosopher, wise
- 332 her/hera هر/هرا all, complete
- 333 heywan حيوان human
- 334 hir- هر to buy
- 335 ita/ite ايته/ايته here
- 336 keynî كينى girl
- 337 kô/kûc كو/كوج where?
- 338 kêy/kêya كى/كيا 1. house, 2. the building or chamber where Alevi assembly meets
- 339 kir كر/كير 1. deaf, 2. deaf-mute
- 340 kô/kû كو/كوو mountain
- 341 kötik کوتک dog
- 342 lacî لاجى boy
- 343 mardim ماردم man, someone
- 344 masîk ماسيک fish
- 345 mişt مشت morning, the time from sunrise to noon
- 346 mûs- مووس to learn
- 347 mirtal/mirtar مرتال/مرتار shield, a broad piece of defensive armor carried on the arm
- 348 nasîn ناسين knowledge
- 349 nôbinô نينو possibility
- 350 nônibinô ننينو impossibility
- 351 niwazîl نوازيل 1. illness, 2. stupidity, a stupid idea or act
- 352 pawin- پاون- to wait, to look forward expectantly
- 353 pî/pîy پى father
- 354 pîl پيل strong, having moral or intellectual power
- 355 rôçîn روچين light, something that makes vision possible
- 356 serd سرد darkness
- 357 se'at ساعات time
- 358 sira سرا where?
- 359 stor ستر/ستور horse
- 360 şarab شاراب wine
- 361 şew شو 1. night, 2. darkness
- 362 şimşêr شمشير 1. sword, 2. pen
- 363 tine/tinya تنه/تنيا unique, being the only one
- 364 tize تزه new
- 365 vazir وازر yesterday
- 366 ver ور before, sooner or quicker than
- 367 waya وايا sister
- 368 waz- واز- to like, to want
- 369 wac واج there, in or at that place
- 370 xoca خوجا master, having chief authority

- 371 xebir/xabir خبر/خاير knowledge
- 372 xêr خر goodness
- 373 yazmiş يازميش handwriting
- 374 za'if ظائف poor, inferior in quality or value
- 375 zing زنگ rich, having abundant possessions and especially material wealth
- 376 zir زير gold
- 377

MUSTAFA DEHQAN
University of Tehran

QI

بِسْمِ اللَّهِ الرَّحْمَنِ الرَّحِيمِ وَبِاسْتِغْنَاءِ الْمَيِّمَةِ فَاتَى الْأَصْبَحَ وَخَالَقَ الْأَرْوَاحَ وَالشَّيَاطِينَ فَاطَمَ الْقُلُوبَ وَالرِّجَالَ
 حَمَّاسًا وَمَبْدِعَ الْأَنْوَاعِ وَالْأَجْنَاسِ وَالنُّفُوسِ بِرَأْيِهِ الْقُدْرَةَ وَالنَّعْيَةَ كَمَا صَدَّقَهُ حُزْنَ لِسُلْطَانِهِ وَالْمَعْدُودَ لِحُجْرَتِهِ
 خَلَقَ الْأَشْيَاءَ كَمَا شَاءَ بِإِلْهَامِهِ وَالظُّلُمَ وَالْأَبْجَادَ وَاللُّغَةَ بِمَا تَرَدَّدَتْ لَهَا تَقْدِيمًا تَلَمَّتْ بِعَقْدِهِ حَكْمَهُ صَدُورَ الْعَالَمِ
 شَيْءًا وَتَلَمَّتْ بِفِيهِ بِحُجُومِ نَهْمِهِ وَحُجُومِ الْأَحْيَاءِ جَمْعَ بَيْنِ الْأَرْوَاحِ وَالْبَشَرِ بِالْحَسَنِ بِالْيَقِينِ وَالْمَرْحُومِ
 بِتَوَدُّدِهِ الْمَلْفُوفِ بِالْقَيْدِ فَكَيْفَ أَلْهَمَ الْأَرْوَاحَ وَالْبَشَرِ بِمَعْرِفَةِ تَعْبَرُهُ وَذُرِّي الْأَنْوَاعِ مَبْدِعِ
 الْأَعْيَادِ الْكَلْبِ سُلْطَانِ الْأَنْبِيَاءِ رَأْيِهِ مَقْدَمِ سَائِرَتِ سُلْطَانِ الْوَالِدِينَ كَمَا نَمَّ مَا نَمَّ مَا سَلَّمَ جُودًا وَجُودًا قَوْلِي سُبْحَانَ اللَّهِ عَالَمِهَا خَيْرُ شَيْءٍ كَمَا نَمَّ مَا نَمَّ مَا سَلَّمَ جُودًا وَجُودًا

سلسله

وليس هذا احد ما اراد ان يروى في سيرة الصحابة والائمة
 التي رويها والى اليات تم في سنة ١٢٤٦ هـ بالعلم عيان اشد من وقت الذي كان فيه ونصاه وحصل اجراء من اولاد

٤

٤٢٣٦

١٣١